Technology drives the Indian Poll scene

Candidates use blogs, sms to spread messages

Ramu Banerjee | TNN

New Delhi: Padyatras are passe. This Assembly elections, aspiring candidates are definitely keeping up with the norms of the times. Personalised emails, sms, websites and blogs seem to be the mode of communication, even as they devise innovative ways of beating the strict Election Commission guidelines on use of posters and banners. Enter arms and wrist bands, calendars, clocks, pens, coasters and even paper weights.

Deepaa Gupta, a hopeful from Kalkaji, says she's connecting with her voter base through regular emails. "It's important to share your vision with the people. Since I have a CA background, I'm hoping to connect with the business community of my constituency. I've sourced the emails of professionals in Kalkaji, whom I'm sharing my vision with." Email ids are, interestingly, easily available.

Gupta's not only relying on emails though. SMSes to the voter-base are also a part of her campaigning strategy.

Messages however, is not what J.P. Singh, managing the campaign strategy of some of the election hopefuls, recommends. "Though numbers are easily available for paise per number from agents, most are not correct. Besides, people get irritated with repeated sms. It's better to opt for a strategy that connects you directly," adds Singh. One of the ideas he's using for his candidates is arm or wrist bands sporting symbols or pictures of the candidates. "like the rakhi, it's a band of security being promised by the candidate, only it's to protect the country," says Singh.

Interestingly, to date, the only website that was well-known was that of BJP state chief Harshvardhan. But now, MLA-hopefuls are also lining up. GK MLA-designate Jitender Kochhar, plans to put one up soon.

"I'm waiting for my name to be selected officially before I do so," says Kochhar. The former MCD councilor has more plans, including a public debate with his BJP opponents, V.K. Malhotra

Campaign goes hi-tech, Delhi firm manages it all

Candidates in five constituencies in the state have the poll management software

Shailendra Paranipe

A Delhi-based entrepreneur has launched a portal, which provides almost all services required to contest an election.

JP Singh

director, Awaz India Media

Our services include election material, campaign logistics, research and constituency nurturing services"

The company — Awaz India Media (Private) Limited — has signed agreements with candidates in at least five Lok Sabha constituencies in Maharashtra to provide the election management software.

Director of Awaz JP Singh told DNA that the company requires six weeks to make available the complete election management system for a Lok Sabha candidate. This includes a macro-level survey besides managing the campaign across the constituency.

According to Singh, 72% of the traditional election material including pamphlets, hoardings and flex boards are a sheer waste. "Party workers do not distribute 100% of the pamphlets they receive from the party or the candidate," he said. Singh said his company provides total election management solutions by using the latest techniques and specially created software.

Under constituency nurturing services, Awaz provides detailed databases with specific briefing to the candidate. The candidate has all the details of his constituency. He can identify the people by their names, their pension problems and the progress of their children.

"This kind of service has helped to a great extent during the elections in some North Indian states," he said.

Singh, who was in the city and toured a few other constituencies last week, however refused to identify the political parties and the candidates who have sought his help for the upcoming polls.

Kalmadi techs his campaign to a new height in Pune

Shailendra Paranipe, PUNE

The Congress candidate from Pune, Suresh Kalmadi, has gone hi-tech and is using state-of-the-art technology to manage his election campaign.

One such software, which is a two-way communication facility, will enable Kalmadi to contact around 1,500 polling booth agents of his party simultaneously.

Sources close to the MP said he held a meeting of various sub-groups to plan the campaign soon after the announcement of his candidature for the Pune constituency. While announcing that 95% of the booth committees will be established, Kalmadi said that he would not meet all the polling agents and representatives, instead he would interact only with the in-charge of the polling booths.

The technology used by the Congress leader will enable him to simultaneously interact with agents from as many as 1,500 booths.

As per the plan, he will be available on a particular phone number at the Congress Bhavan.

A Kalmadi aide said that instead of the Congress leader physically attending to the booth agents, the computer software will help him communicate with the agents simultaneously.

The software will have recorded questions and answers by the Congress nominee and depending upon the query and problems faced by the agent in his/her respective area, Kalmadi will respond in five minutes. Another election-related software has a capacity of communicating with over 60,000 voters at a time. The system is uploaded with the voters' list along with details like phone numbers and e-mail IDs. Voters can access the frequently asked questions loaded on the site.

The campaign management

While for Assembly elections, such campaign managers may be a new thing, it's already been tried out in the DUSI elections earlier this year. Says a candidate who had hired a manager but lost the election, "It's the best solution, especially since this year, the Lyngdoh committee had asked for handwritten posters, which my party colleagues couldn't do. So we hired out the work, along with the transport needs. It made campaigning much simpler." Are any prospective MLAs listening?

GenX prefers trade fair to poll campaign

Rumu Banerjee | TNN

New Delhi: The India International Trade Fair (IITF) seems to be giving sleepless nights to politicians in the city. As election campaigns start off on a high note after nominations, aspiring candidates are counting on manpower to help in creating awareness amongst voters. Campaign managers, however, claim getting the hordes of young boys and girls to accompany on the campaign trails is becoming difficult. Apparently, they prefer the air-conditioned environs of the trade fair to sweating it out on the streets.

Admits JP Singh of Awaaz India Media, an agency that's involved in supplying the manpower to political candidates, "In this election, a lot of things are being outsourced, including manpower. But it's turned out to be a problem in the past few days as trade fair is also starting, and a lot of these young educated people prefer to work there."

What exactly do these young boys and girls do? Apparently, the boys are sent off to contact all the voters on the Election Commission (EC) voting list of the constituency, and distribute pamphlets of the candidates. The girls meanwhile are put on telephone duty — calling up voters and giving a kind of sales pitch for the aspiring MLA.

While boys are asked to contact voters and distribute pamphlets of candidates, girls are put on telephone duty — calling up voters and making a pitch for aspirants

Graduates are put on the job of maintaining an eye on the rivals' rallies, identifying the areas where support seems to be strong. This information is passed on to the political candidate thereafter.

Girls in fact are in great demand. Says Singh, who also provides campaign services for elections, "They accompany the womenfolk of the candidate on constituency rounds, and act as an interface with the public as well as the media." Pretty, young girls with good English speaking skills is usually the profile that's considered.

The money's pretty good too. While those doing the rounds with pamphlets are paid around Rs 800 per day to visit 50 houses, telephone callers are paid Rs 200-250 to make 200 calls. Those doing campaign duty are paid better, at Rs 400 per day, plus transport and food fare. The prices however, are all set to go up after November 14, as campaigning gets more hectic with elections coming up.

The problem of lack of adequate manpower has however, prompted many agencies to go on a desperate hunt for willing people. Said Anwar Siddiqui, heading Anwar Enterprises, an agency that supplies manpower, "The elections have come at a time when the trade fair is also starting off. Most of our contacts on the manpower list have said they prefer to work in the fair, as it pays more and has better working conditions. But the demand from political candidates is so great that they are willing to even pay higher fees." That should be good news for many.

Their effective use would also minimize harmful effects of substances used in some of these materials some of which are carcinogenic. Because of the past associations of the Directors and the advisors of Election Awaaz, velocity and the process of elections is quite well understood. The candidate would have ample time at disposal to concentrate on the strategical moves as per his party's doctrine. The technology provided by Election Awaaz empowers the contestant's campaign, and enhances his winning chances.

Technology and Strategy makes a potent combination to ensure success at the hustings. By using Election Awaaz's services the contestants are ensuring their campaign is focused on quality and not quantity.

He has already held a meeting with representatives of the local industry. He said measures were being suggested and

यह कहना है सांसद मनीष तिवारी का। मनीष रविवार को पत्रकारों से रू-ब-रू थे। इस मौके पर उन्होंने अपनी वेबसाइट भी लांच की। मनीष ने बताया कि उनकी अलग-अलग इंडस्ट्री और व्यापारिक संगठनों से बातचीत हो चुकी है। उनसे अपनी समस्याओं और इंडस्ट्री को प्रोत्साहित करने के लिए उठाए जा सकने वाले कदमों के बारे में बताने के लिए कहा गया है, ताकि इंडस्ट्री के विकास के लिए केंद्रीय बजट में व्यवस्था करवाई जा सके। मनीष ने कहा, वे खुद तो संबंधित मंत्रालयों के संपर्क में रहेंगे ही, अगर किसी संगठन के पदाधिकारी खुद जाकर अपनी बात रखना चाहते हों तो वे उसकी व्यवस्था भी करेंगे। उन्होंने कहा कि शहर को विकसित बनाने और ट्रैफिक समस्या से उबारने के लिए भी उनका विशेष प्रयास रहेगा। इसके अलावा चुनाव के दौरान घोषित किया गए अपने एजेंडे पर भी काम करेंगे।

उन्होंने कहा कि यूपीए सरकार ने अपने पिछले कार्यकाल में लुधियाना के लिए दो हजार करोड़ रुपए से ज्यादा के प्रोजेक्ट लॉन्ग टर्म नेशनल रियल एस्टेट प्लानिंग के तहत मंजूर किए
